EXAMPLE MONOLOGUE:

(INTRODUCTION) To begin with, I'm going to talk about the generation gap between parents and teenagers.

(MAIN BODY: FIRST ARGUMENT) On the one hand, I believe most parents and teenagers often have arguments about housework, homework, free time, holiday plans, what time to come back home at night, etc. Most of teenagers usually have the reputation of being rebellious, rude and disobedient. Moreover, most parents feel their children should have a sense of responsibility they don't have, for instance: at home, not many teenagers make their beds, lay the table or pick up their dirty clothes after a shower, therefore, parents have to take care of those household chores and others such as: cleaning the bathroom, the floor, doing the washing-up or taking out the rubbish, among others. This is a common problem between generations in any family. Nevertheless, I also feel parents should teach children to help with housework from an early age.

(MAIN BODY: SECOND ARGUMENT) On the other hand, not all teenagers are always complaining and lazy, there are also responsible ones who help their parents, especially if they have problems, for instance: if one parent is ill or they are going through economic difficulties. Fortunately, not all teenagers are the same way.

(CONCLUSION) All things considered, I feel upbringing is really important to teach children they must also do housework to help their parents, this is something even more necessary if both parents work outside.
